

SANTANDER WOULD MAINTAIN CAPITAL STRENGTH IN SEVERELY ADVERSE SCENARIO, BASED ON FEDERAL RESERVE STRESS TEST

Boston, March 5, 2015 – The capital ratios of Santander Bank, N.A. (SBNA) and its parent company, Santander Holdings USA, Inc. (SHUSA), would remain above minimum regulatory requirements under the Federal Reserve's hypothetical severely adverse economic scenario, according to the latest stress tests conducted by the Federal Reserve Board (FRB). This exercise is required by the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act.

The companies' internal results under the severely adverse scenario also showed continued resilience through the forecast horizon. Using the companies' internal models and processes, Santander Bank's Tier 1 common ratio under the severely adverse scenario would decline from 13.4% at September 30, 2014 to 10.2% at December 31, 2016. The Bank's benchmark capital ratio would therefore remain above the minimum regulatory requirement of 5%.

The same exercise for SHUSA showed that the Tier 1 common ratio under the severely adverse scenario would decline from 11.0% at September 30, 2014, to 7.9% at December 31, 2016, the end of the forecast period.

The Federal Reserve's Supervisory Severely Adverse assumes a substantial weakening in global economic activity and large reductions in asset prices. In summary, for the U.S.:

- The unemployment rate increases to 10 percent, accompanied by a decline in real GDP of 4½ percent,
- Equity prices fall by approximately 60 percent and house prices decline 25 percent during the scenario period,
- Investment grade and non-investment grade firms both experience significant financial distress, reducing asset prices linked to these borrowers, and
- Short-term interest rates remain near zero through 2017, while yields on the long-term Treasury bonds decline to 1 percent in the fourth quarter of 2014 before edging up.
